Re: iroha Note Well, you've got a problem with your computer as you have to restore it to the last point where it worked right. So first of all, if you have a

SSD, look into `/var/log/system.log` on your home directory and look for errors. But you could also try to do a clean install of Mac OS X Snow Leopard. At least the application won't crash if you can't restore your home directory. But I'm not sure if you can install it the way it is now. Re: iroha

You could restore your computer, or do a clean install. macrumors 6502 i have a problem with the program. i first installed it, then i didn't use it for awhile, and when i installed it again, the program is completely different and i can't even open it. it just opens up a menu, without any windows or anything at all. how do i
