In an exclusive interview with NBC News, the now-28-year-old woman, whose name is protected because she is the accuser of two college athletes, told NBC News she was drinking in a restaurant with the players and other teammates shortly after the NCAA tournament ended in early April. She said she didn't know them very well, and she offered them a ride home. They told her they were 21 and living at a fraternity house. She said the next thing she remembers is waking up in a bedroom where she was sexually assaulted. "It was a really confusing night," she said. "I wanted to be able to tell somebody. I wanted the world to know what had happened to me." Her roommate immediately found out what happened and threatened to report the incident to the police, she said. "It was just the way I saw it," the former student said. "We thought that what happened was my fault and I was partly responsible and that was how I took it." She said she wanted to trust the men, and the next day she woke up to a text message from one of the players, saying: "just checking on you. We haven't done anything." She declined to name the men or the fraternity house they were staying at. They both left MSU around April 4 and were not arrested, NBC News has learned. MSU declined to comment on the case. "The university has a longstanding commitment to the safety and well-being of our students," said Danna Haupt, a spokeswoman for the university. MS
