Re: selling your 'certified junky' car In order to sell a car, be it a jalopy or souped up masterpiece, it depends on several factors. Re: selling your 'certified junky' car I can relate to this topic. I bought a 65 classic with two flat tires and a missing mirror. It would have fetched only half of what it was worth. But the guy accepted my offer and was very happy. Later, the repair work was quoted at 1800$. Although the car was chocked, it did not cost much money. So, getting back to the seller, if you think you'll get a good deal, go ahead and offer him a good price. Another thing. Do not low-ball him. Give him your price and do not negotiate for anything lower. If he wants to lower, go with the final offer. One thing to keep in mind is to offer to pay half the amount he offered. It would save time in negotiations. Or, better yet, pay the full price with a deposit. 1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates generally to a passive touch-sensing apparatus and more particularly to a passive touch-sensing apparatus capable of effectively sensing a touching of a finger or a flat object such as a book or a sheet of paper in a non-contact manner e79caf774b
