LXR Activators for the Treatment of Acute Liver Failure. Acute liver failure (ALF) is a syndrome characterized by rapid loss of liver function that usually leads to death within 3 months. The exact pathophysiological mechanisms of ALF are still unknown, but in most cases ALF is caused by severe extrahepatic organ dysfunction, particularly by multisystem organ failure. Although the severe form of ALF, also called fulminant liver failure, is quite uncommon, the risk for liver transplantation in these patients has substantially increased in the last decades because of a better understanding of the pathophysiology and an improved long-term survival. Currently, supportive treatment, including liver transplantation, is the only effective treatment for ALF. The third-generation synthetic retinoid X receptor agonist bexarotene (Targretin, rh-all-trans-retinoic acid) was first approved for the treatment of cutaneous T-cell lymphomas in the US in 2009. During the past years, additional studies demonstrated that bexarotene is able to modulate the pathophysiology of ALF. In this article, we review the major mechanisms that account for the activity of bexarotene in ALF and we summarize the preclinical and clinical data supporting the hypothesis that bexarotene might become a safe and effective therapy for ALF.
