This study examined risk factors for increased depressive symptoms during pregnancy among low income Cambodian women in the United States, including demographics and pregnancy history. Cambodian women (n=104) were assessed at four points in their pregnancy (baseline, 5, 9, and 13 weeks gestation). Depressive symptoms were assessed using the Center for Epidemiological Studies Depression (CES-D) scale. Demographic and pregnancy history variables, including: age, income, pregnancy history, status of employment, and parity, were examined. Findings indicated that younger age, lower income, and prenatal suicidality were associated with increased levels of depressive symptoms. Higher levels of depressive symptoms were also associated with experiencing one or more previous mental health problems, experiencing involuntary psychiatric detention, being suicidal, and experiencing domestic violence.HMS L83 HMS L83 was a L-class submarine built for the Royal Navy during the First World War. She was not completed until the summer of 1918, making her one of the last of the 17 boats ordered that summer. She spent her working life moving from one area of the Western Approaches to another based at Gibraltar, taking part in the Dardanelles campaign between August and November 1915. She survived the war and was sold for scrap in 1923. Design and description The British L-class submarine was planned as an improved version of the United States L-class submarine with more torpedo tubes. The submarines had a length of overall, a beam of and a mean draft of. They displaced on the surface and submerged. The L-class boats had a crew of two officers and fourteen ratings. For surface running, the L-class boats were powered by two diesel engines, each driving one propeller shaft. When submerged each propeller was driven by a electric motor.
